

Grade 4.2.3 Wilson Fluency

Boss of the Plains

trav what sun ev swirl ex Bat e Stet wood cus el ev bon er ing plor ter lev one sons en to ers er nets y ers son en mers

□

---

travelers whatever sunbonnets everyone swirling explorers
Batterson eleven Stetsons wooden customers

□

---

At first, settlers and travelers in the American West wore whatever hats they had worn back home: knit caps, wool derbies, or straw sombreros. Some wore old sea captain's caps; others wore army hats, calico sunbonnets, homburgs, slouch hats, or even silk high hats. Everyone wore some kind of hat, though, because the weather was likely to be either burning sunshine, drenching rain, whipping wind, or swirling snow. A hat was important.

One hat would come along that was particularly well suited to frontier life. This is the true story of that amazing hat – the hat won the West.

At first, settlers and travelers in the American West wore whatever hats they had worn back home: knit caps, wool derbies, or straw sombreros.

Some wore old sea captain's caps; others wore army hats, calico sunbonnets, homburgs, slouch hats, or even silk high hats.

Everyone wore some kind of hat, though, because the weather was likely to be either burning sunshine, drenching rain, whipping wind, or swirling snow.

A hat was important.

One hat would come along that was particularly well suited to frontier life. This is the true story of that amazing hat – the hat won the West.